

One time, on Thanksgiving of 1992, while forest lovers were eating tofu turkey dinners with their friends and families, Greedy Charles ordered the loggers to cut the trees in a special place in Headwaters Forest called Owl Creek. Many endangered animals, like a bird called the Marbled Murrelet, died that day. The Earth First! group ran into the woods to stop the logging, but sadly, many old trees had been cut by the time they got there.
